Let it build the Context

It reads the treatment and populates a Context tab itself POV, tone, character notes, lighting approach.

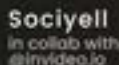

We didn't write any of it. Every shot from here respects it. We never repeat ourselves.

Lock the visual language

We test styles before committing. One storyboard frame rendered 12 ways, side by side, so we judge style and not composition. Pick one, lock it into Context.

We lock every character before
*we generate a single shot.

Upload a reference or describe them, the agent builds a character sheet. The same character from multiple angles, and we lock it into Context.

Pro move: build them without their signature accessory first, so the agent nails the face before any costume goes on.

Lock the locations

We don't list locations ourselves. We ask the agent to read the treatment and tell us every location the film needs, then generate concepts and lock our favourites.
